

NETWORKING

HOW DO I EFFECTIVELY NETWORK WITH OTHERS?

Forming effective networks is an important key factor to success. The most effective way to network is to find people who are in your niche or have the same interests as you.

WHERE IS THE MOST EFFECTIVE PLACE TO NETWORK?

You will typically find people to network with outside of your workplace. For instance, you may be able to effectively network at scientific meetings that are regional, national, or even international.

HOW DO I START NETWORKING?

You can start networking with people by offering to collaborate on a project that interests both parties. In addition, you have to learn to always give and help others before taking or asking for help.

WHO SHOULD I NETWORK WITH?

It is important to narrow your focus of interest both in the clinical and research area to avoid getting distracted when networking. .
