

The maps show changes in a local industrial village of England called Stamdorf between 1985 and 2015.

The development which occurred in the village of Stamdorf is illustrated in these maps below over 30 years. It is clear from the graph that the Village had become more modernized and the village's appearance had changed completely during the period.

According to what shown, the eastern part of the Arlington road had developed entirely. The old wooden bridge was redeveloped into a modern Steel one. Near the bridge, the factory was flattened and new trees were planted instead. Moving to the north of the river, small roadside inns were relocated to the south of the Thames river, while a new extension of the main road was built leading to a new large industrial area. Just over the extension, an industrial staff quarter was erected.

On the other hand, the western district of the main road witnessed big changes. Starting from newly constructed housing estates, which situated on the northern and southern part of the Thames river. The Field opposing the Arlington road in 1985 was relocated southerly adjacent to the river.

To sum up, we could say that although many changes took place in the village, the village's planning remained almost the same during the two years.
