If my state has not pre-approved the course, can I still receive credit for it?

Some states have a reciprocal agreement allowing licensees to receive credit hours for a course approved by a different state or if they submit a request for approval. While it is the responsibility of the licensee to confirm her state's policies, and to submit the paperwork, the following list includes states with known reciprocal agreements. Whether the agreement is with all other states is up to the licensee to determine.

Alaska	Georgia	Michigan	Oregon	Utah
Arizona	Hawaii	Mississippi	Pennsylvania	Vermont
California	Illinois	Missouri	Rhode Island	Virginia
Delaware	Indiana	New York	South Dakota	Wyoming
D.C.	Kentucky	North Carolina	Texas	Florida

What if I do not see my state listed in any of the above tables?

You may still be able to receive credit! We have not been able to confirm your state's approval process. Please contact your regulating agency. If you send us the information you gather, we can add it to the information on this page.

If my state has not approved this course, can I petition to receive credit?

Several states do allow an individual to seek approval for a course. Protocols vary across states: some need advance notice; some allow for approval after the course has been completed. Check with your state's regulating agency to find out if this is possible for you.
