TRANSFORM YOUR BUSINESS THROUGH

BUSINESS CONTINUITY PLANNING

Increase resilience by:

01

Predetermining how you want your staff to react to disruption

02

Identifying who should be involved in the response effort

03

Being prepared ahead of time

04

Accelerating the response

05

Reducing the time to recovery

06

Mitigating customer disruptions

07

Avoiding negative long-term consequences

Lessons learned

Each crisis your company faces will teach valuable skills and better methods for response which need to be recorded and easily available during the next crisis.

Take this opportunity to review the products and services you have classed as “desirable” in your Business Impact Analysis. These services will not be missed in the short-term and may be reviewed, revised or discarded following a business disruption.

Opportunity for change

“During downtimes, there is significantly less resistance to change, and companies also may have underutilized workers who can take on restructuring tasks” (Sheffi, 2015). Consider using this spare capacity for any of the following:

- Staff (team restructure, hire new talent, training)
- Improve IT Systems
- Review Distribution Strategy
- Change of supplier (better price and/ or quality)
- Expansion
- Launch an innovative new product
