5 Tips for Finding the Right Photos

Transcript © 2019 Jen White

The scrapbook page we're creating in Mastery 2, contains a place for three portrait orientated photos. Here are five tips to help you decide what the subject of your page will be and what photos you might choose for this class.

I'll start right out showing you the three photos I used for my page. Tip #1 is Same Subject, Same Zoom. Just like the tip sounds, choose three photos that are the same subject and all have pretty much the same zoom. The three photos could all be nearly identical, but also consider ones that have a slightly different angle, position, or facial expression.

Tip #2 is the same subject, but a different zoom. This tip is similar to the last, but there's an obvious difference in the zoom of all three photos. Again, this could be the same photo transformed into three different zooms. But using different photos will provide greater interest.

The third tip is to use three photos that represent a single event and are meaningful to you. Having different zoom percentages on these photos is not a must, but it will add interest to your scrapbook page as well.

Tip #4 is to look for three photos that tell a story. This is like a timeline where, first you did this, and then this happened, and then this was the outcome.

Hopefully, so far I've shown you that you don't have to have amazing or perfectly shot photos in order to get started with this class. But my last example is to show you what might be possible if you only have one amazing photo that you'd like to use. Tip #5 is to put one great

So hopefully during this video you've started to think about which photos you might choose for your Mastery 2 scrapbook page. Before moving on to the next video, take some time to decide which photos you'll use and place them in a folder in an easy to find location. I'll not be showing you how to edit or work with photos in this class, so you'll also need to make sure your chosen three photos are all spiffied up and ready to go. I'll see you in the next video.
