Some states have a reciprocal agreement allowing licensees to receive credit hours for a course approved by a different state. While it is the responsibility of the licensee to confirm her state's policies, the following list includes states with known reciprocal agreements. Whether the agreement is with all other states is up to the licensee to determine.

Alaska, Arizona, California, Delaware, Washington DC, Georgia, Hawaii, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, New York, North Carolina, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Texas, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, Wyoming

Without a reciprocal agreement, can I take this course and receive credit from my state?

There are two other situations where licensees can get credit for a course offered in a different state:

States Not Requiring Physical Therapy Course Pre-Approval: Alabama, Colorado, Connecticut, Idaho, Iowa, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, North Dakota, Oregon, South Carolina, Tennessee, Washington

States with No Physical Therapy Continuing Education Requirements at this time: Maine

What if I do not see my state listed in any of the above tables?

You may still be able to receive credit! We have not been able to confirm your state's approval process. Please contact your regulating agency. Email the information you gather to: admin@kidsbowelbladder.com, we can add it to the information to this page.

If my state has not approved this course, can I petition to receive credit?

Several states do allow an individual to seek approval for a course. Protocols vary across states: some need advanced notice; some allow for approval after the course has been completed. Check with your state's regulating agency to find out if this is possible for you.
