Hi, my name is Justin Putney and I'm the creator in5, a plugin to Adobe InDesign lets you create interactivity without coding. You have total control of the files that in5 exports, so you can easily host them on your own website. But what if you don't have a website yet? Well, then this course is for you. Back when I was first interested in creating my own website, I was lucky enough to have someone who could walk me through the basics so that I felt comfortable getting started. I think everyone should have that opportunity. So I've created this course. It will help you choose a hosting provider and a plan that fits your needs, show you how to upload files so they appear on your website and how to link files together. I'll show you how to create a custom email address, password protect directories, set up sub domains, and a few other things that I've learned over the course of having a website for a decade and a half. I've boiled things down to make them simple and straightforward. So let's get started learning how to publish to your own web domain.
