

Coffee Break Travel Diaries

Season 1, Lesson 1

Transcript and Notes

Study text

Io mi chiamo Giulia, e con il mio amico Paolo siamo arrivati questa mattina a Pisa, in Toscana. Tra cinque giorni ci sarà il Palio di Siena, quindi ne stiamo approfittando per visitare tutta la regione. Ovviamente Pisa non poteva mancare! Abbiamo subito lasciato i bagagli al nostro albergo e siamo corsi ad ammirare la Torre di Pisa. A dire la verità, non ce l'aspettavamo così pendente!

siamo arrivati questa mattina we arrived this morning

tra cinque giorni

in five days' time

Note that the preposition tra (also: fra) does not only mean "between" and in this case it is used to indicate the time that separates a future event from the moment of the utterance.

ci sarà < essere

there will be

Il Palio (m) di Siena

Horse race of Medieval flavour that takes place twice a year in Siena's main square (Piazza del Campo).

quindi

therefore

ne stiamo approfittando < approfittare

we are taking advantage of this (of the fact that we want to go Siena / we are profiting from the situation)

The verb approfittare can have a negative and a positive meaning. In this context, it is certainly used in its positive sense with the idea of using the visit to Siena as an excuse to tour the whole region of Tuscany. Note the use of ne whose function is to avoid the repetition of phrases introduced by the preposition di (as in approfittare di). If you wish to review this grammar point, please refer back to: Coffee Break Italian Season 2, Episode 15.

obviously

Pisa non poteva mancare

Pisa could not be missing (from the list of places to visit) abbiamo subito lasciato i bagagli < lasciare we left immediately our luggage / our suitcases

Unlike English, the word bagaglio in Italian can be pluralised.

siamo corsi < correre

we ran

The verb correre in compound tenses can be constructed both with essere and avere.

However, the choice of the auxiliary depends on the type of action performed. If it implies going from one place to another, then essere must be used. In this case more emphasis is placed on the destination and the verb itself also carries the nuance of wanting to reach a final point with great desire, not necessarily with a physical run but with a rapid movement. Otherwise, the simple action of running in an enclosed space without the idea of going from one place to another is expressed by using avere.

Compare the following examples:

Ero in ritardo e sono corso in ufficio (I was late so I dashed to the office).

Ieri non sono andato in palestra così ho corso un po' in ufficio (Yesterday I didn't go to the gym so I had a little run in the office).

Torre (pendente) di Pisa

The Leaning Tower of Pisa

a dire la verità

to tell the truth, to be honest non ce l'aspettavamo < aspettarsi we weren't expecting it

Note that the pronoun ci changes into ce for phonetic reasons when combined with another pronoun (in this case: l').

Paolo ha insistito per avere una foto mentre sorreggeva la Torre, poi abbiamo preso un bel gelato artigianale per combattere l'afa. A fine giugno fa davvero caldo! Per questo a cena abbiamo deciso di mangiare in un ristorante tipico all'aperto: pasta, salumi, formaggi, buon vino... la cucina toscana è davvero meravigliosa.

ha insistito per avere una foto < insistere he insisted to have (to take) a photo

Note that the verb insistere, despite being a verb of the second conjugation, forms its past participle using the ending -ito instead of -uto.

mentre sorreggeva la torre < sorreggere while he was upholding the tower abbiamo preso un bel gelato < prendere we had a nice ice-cream

The adjective bello when used in front of a noun (which is its most natural position in terms of word order) undergoes changes to make it sound similar to the corresponding definite article. In this case:

il gelato > bel gelato

per combattere l'afa

in order to fight back the mugginess

a fine giugno

at the end of June

fa davvero caldo < fare

it's really hot

per questo

for this reason

all'aperto

outside, open-air, outdoors, al fresco salumi (pl)

cold cuts, cured meats

buon vino (m)

good wine

The adjective buono, often used before nouns, undergoes some changes to sound more similar to the corresponding indefinite article.

un vino > buon vino

This grammar point is also dealt with in Coffee Break Italian Season 2, Episode 12.

la cucina toscana (m)

Tuscan cuisine, Tuscan food, Tuscan gastronomy

The word cucina literally means “kitchen” but it is also used to describe food or the way of cooking. Here are some examples:

Adoro la cucina di tua madre (I love your mother’s kitchen or I love your mother’s food).

Mi piace molto la cucina giapponese (I really like Japanese food).

meraviglioso/a wonderful

Dopo cena abbiamo fatto una passeggiata in centro: le città italiane d'estate vivono di notte! I bar e i negozi erano aperti, e in giro c'erano molte persone. Alle 22 però siamo tornati in albergo: domani ci aspetta una lunga giornata a Lucca!

dopo cena

after dinner

abbiamo fatto una passeggiata in centro we went for a walk in the city centre d'estate

in summer

The preposition in can also be used.

vivono di notte < vivere

they live at night

in giro c'erano molte persone there were a lot of people around siamo tornati in albergo < tornare we returned to the hotel ci aspetta una lunga giornata

a long day awaits us
