

Difficult Conversations: The Three Conversations

A Battle of Message		A Learning Conversation
Assumption 1: I know all that I need to know to understand fully what happened.	The “What happened?” conversation. Our challenge: the situation is more complex than either person alone can see.	Assumption 1: Each of us is bringing different information and perceptions to the situation. There are likely to be important things that each of us does not yet know.
Goal 1: Persuade the other(s) that I am right.		Goal 1: Explore each other’s stories, including how each of us understands the situation and why.
Assumption 2: I know what the others intended, meaning that I know why they said what they said or did what they did.		Assumption 2: I know what I intended, and I know the impact the others’ actions had on me. I don’t know, and can’t know, what’s in their head.
Goal 2: Let the other(s) know what they did was wrong.		Goal 2: Share the impact of the others’ actions on me and find out what they were thinking. Also ask what impact I’m having on them.
Assumption 3: The situation is all their fault. (Or it’s all my fault)		Assumption 3: We have probably both contributed to this mess.
Goal 3: Get them to admit blame and take responsibility for making amends.		Goal 3: Understand the contribution system: how our actions interact to produce this result.
Assumption: Either feelings are irrelevant and wouldn’t be helpful to share, or my feelings are their fault and they need to hear about them and make me feel better.	The feelings conversation Our challenge: the situation is emotionally charged, for each of us.	Assumption: Feelings are the core of the situation and are usually complex. I may have to dig a bit to understand my own feelings.
Goal: Either avoid talking about feelings completely or really let them have it!		Goal: Address feelings, both mine and theirs, without judgments or blame. Acknowledge feelings before problem solving.
Assumption: Each of us is either competent or incompetent, good or bad, loveable or unlovable. There is no in-between.	The identity conversation Our challenge: the conflict we experience affects <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1) how we view ourselves, 2) how we view others, and 3) how we think others view us. 	Assumption: There may be a great deal at stake psychologically for both of us. Each of us is complex, and neither of us is perfect.
Goal: Protect my all or nothing self-image.		Goal: Understand the identity issues on the line for each of us – each of us wants to be seen as a whole human being.
