

Custom system

Even though creating a custom-made system for managing users, namely registration and login processes, is actually like reinventing the wheel and there are many proven and available ways to completely skip this step, we will do this purely for educational purposes manually.

In real development, you should always use a solution that is already proven to work flawlessly with an emphasis on security.

With this in mind, we will strive for some level of security as well, but don't attempt to apply the solution presented here to critical applications, as this course is primarily focused on beginners and I don't aspire to divert too much from its original purpose.